"We Are All for Diversity, but . . .": How Faculty Hiring Committees Reproduce Whiteness and Practical Suggestions for How They Can Change

OZLEM SENSOY
Simon Fraser University

ROBIN DiANGELO
University of Washington

Despite stated commitments to diversity, predominantly White academic institutions still have not increased racial diversity among their faculty. In this article Robin DiAngelo and Özlem Sensoy focus on one entry point for doing so—the faculty hiring process. They analyze a typical faculty hiring scenario and identify the most common practices that block the hiring of diverse faculty and protect Whiteness and offer constructive alternative practices to guide hiring committees in their work to realize the institution's commitment to diversity.

Step 1: The Job Description

Tenure-Track Position in Elementary Education

Primary responsibilities will include teaching elementary-level teacher preparation courses and other teacher education courses as needed by the unit. Required qualifications include PhD or EdD in Curriculum and Instruction or another closely related field, demonstrated excellence in teaching, and experience teaching in grades 1–6. The ideal candidate will be adept in the use of instructional technology, be familiar with state teacher preparation standards, and be interested in joining a campus community that promotes diversity, respect, and inclusion.

Aren't we setting up new hires to fail if we bring them into a hostile workplace?

There just aren't qualified diverse candidates out there.

These are really good suggestions and thank you for raising them, but the job description was approved by senior administration and it cannot be changed. Besides, if we ask them for changes, we risk losing the position altogether.
